

Contents

About the Authors	iv
Overview of the seven volumes	v
From the Publishers	vi
Also by Analoly T. Fomenko	vii
Also by Gleb V. Nosovskiy	viii

Part I: THE CHRONOLOGY OF RUSSIAN HISTORY

Foreword	5
----------------	---

Introduction

1. General considerations	7
2. Our conception in brief	9
3. The true identity of Mongolia and the Tartar and Mongol invasion. The Cossacks and the Golden Horde	11
4. Batu-Khan was known as the Great Prince	15
5. The Romanovs, the Zakharyins and the Yuryins. Their role in Russian chronography	15

Chapter 1

Russian chronicles and the Millerian-Romanovian version of Russian history

1. The first attempts to write down the history of the ancient Russia	19
1.1. The XVI-XVII century and the edict of Aleksey Mikhailovich	19
1.2. The XVIII century: Miller	21
1.3. Brief corollaries	21
2. Consensual version of Russian history and its genesis. The reasons why all the founders of the Russian historical school were foreign	21
3. The Radzivilovskaya chronicle from Königsberg as the primary source of the Povest Vremennyh Let	26
3.1. The origins of the chronicle's most important copies	26
3.2. The numeration of the chronicle's pages and the "bull's head" watermark	27
4. Forged fragments of the Radzivilovskaya Letopis – the copy that served as basis for the Povest Vremennyh Let	28
4.1. Publications of the Radzivilovskaya Letopis	28
4.2. History of the copy known as the Radzivilovskaya Letopis	29

4.3. A description of the chronicle	29
4.4. Story of a forgery. The mysterious “extra” page in the Povest Vremennyh Let	30
4.5. Who could have planted a page with the “Norman” theory into the Povest Vremennyh Let ?	35
4.6. How the “scientific” Norman theory got dethroned and declared antiscientific	36
4.7. Having planted a page into the chronicle, the hoaxer prepared space for another, soon to be “fortunately found”. The chronology page of the Radzivilovskaya Letopis	37
4.8. The “Academic Moscow Copy” of the Povest Vremennyh Let	38
4.9. Other signs of forgery in the Radzivilovskaya Letopis	39
4.10. What is the chronicle that served as the original for the Radzivilovskaya Chronicle , also known as the Königsberg chronicle?	39
4.11. Which city was the capital of the Polyane = Poles: Kiev or Smolensk?	40
4.12. The arrival of Peter in Königsberg	40
4.13. A brief summary of our analysis of the Radzivilovskaya Chronicle	41
5. Other chronicles that describe the epochs before the XIII century	42
6. The publication rate of the Russian chronicles remains the same as time goes on	42
7. The traditional scheme of the ancient Russian history	43
7.1. The first period: from times immemorial to the middle of the IX century A.D.	43
7.2. The second period: from the middle of the IX century to the middle of the XII – the Kiev Russia starting with Rurik and ending with Yuri Dolgoroukiy (of Rostov)	43
7.3. The third period: the Russia of Vladimir and Suzdal, starting with the middle of the XII century and ending with Batu-Khan’s conquest in 1237	45
7.4. The fourth period: the yoke of the Tartars and the Mongols, starting with the battle of Sit in 1238 and ending with the 1481 “Ougra opposition”, which is considered to mark the “official end of the Great Yoke” nowadays	45
7.5. The fifth period: the Moscow Russia starting with Ivan III and ending with the Great Strife, or the enthronement of the Romanovs in 1613	47
7.6. The sixth period: dynasty of the Romanovs	48

Chapter 2 The two chronological shifts inherent in the history of Russia

1. A general scheme of the parallelism	49
2. A brief description of the 100-year shift manifest in Russian history	54
3. A 400-year shift in Russian history and the resulting dynastic parallelism	56

Chapter 3 Our hypothesis

1. Russia and the Horde	64
1.1. Different points of view	64
1.2. Our hypothesis formulated in brief	65
2. The origins of the Mongols and the Tartars	67
2.1. Ethnic composition of the Mongolian troops	67
2.2. How many Mongols were there? Mongols as seen by contemporaries. Mongolian and Russian attire of the epoch under study	69
3. The “Tartar and Mongol conquest” and the Orthodox Church	70
4. Cossacks and the Horde	72
4.1. The Cossacks were the regular army of Russia (Horde)	72

4.2. Why the Muscovite rulers were accompanied by the “Tartars” rather than armies in military campaigns. The Tartars from Poland and Lithuania	76
5. The real identity of the Horde	79
6. On the conquest of Siberia	79
7. A general remark concerning the word “Cossack”	80
8. Tartar names and Russian names in old Russia	80
8.1. Tartar nicknames	80
8.2. The “strange” effect of the Mongolian conquest on the Russian culture	82
8.3. Russian and Tartar names illustrated by the Verderevskiy family tree	83
9. The real identity of the Mongolian language	83
9.1. How many Mongolian texts are there in existence?	83
9.2. What language were the famous Khan’s yarlyks (decrees, in particular – documents certifying the Princes’ rights to their domains) written in?	84
9.3. In re the Russian and the Tartar letters	86
9.4. History of the Mongols and the chronology of its creation	87
10. Gog and Magog. Chief Prince of Rosh, Meshech and Tubal. Russia-Horde and Moscow Russia on the pages of the Bible	88
11. The real location of Novgorod the Great	90
11.1. What we know about the city of Novgorod (the Great)	90
11.2. Our hypothesis about Yaroslavl being the historical Novgorod the Great	92
11.2.1. Why the traditional identification of the Old Russian capital (Novgorod the Great) as the modern town of Novgorod on the Volkhov is seen as dubious	92
11.2.2. Yaroslavl as an ancient trading centre. The Molozhskaya fair	93
11.2.3. Novgorod and Holmgrad	94
11.2.4. Yaroslav’s Court as the court of a Great Prince	94
11.2.5. How Nizhniy Novgorod had received its name	94
11.2.6. The Yaroslavl Region as the domain of the Great Prince	94
11.2.7. “Gospodin Velikiy Novgorod” (“Lord Novgorod the Great”) as the agglomeration of towns and cities in the Yaroslavl region	94
11.2.8. The famous Icon of Novgorod and the Icon of Yaroslavl	95
12. The falsification of history and archaeology of Novgorod-upon-Volkhov	95
12.1. The real chronology implied by the “layer section” of the pavements in Novgorod-upon-Volkhov	95
12.2. Novgorod-upon-Volkhov had also been known as “okolotok” (Russian word used for a parochial settlement)	100
12.3. The tourist sights presented as the famous “Sovereign’s Court”, where the Archbishop of Novgorod the Great had resided	101
12.4. Novgorod-upon-Volkhov: oddities in occupation layer datings	105
12.5. Birch bark documents had been used by the “ancient” Romans, and therefore cannot predate the XIV century	107
12.6. In re the “Novgorod Datings” of A. A. Zaliznyak and V. L. Yanin. How the abovementioned Academicians date late XVIII century birch bark documents to the XI century	108
12.7. Historians’ response to our article on the Novgorod datings of A. A. Zaliznyak and V. L. Yanin	115
13. A hypothesis about the etymology of the word “Russia” (“Rouss”)	117

Chapter 4 Ancient Russia as seen by contemporaries

1. Abul-Feda claimed the Russians to be “a people of Turkish origin”	118
2. Russia and Turkey	119
3. What one sees on the famous Arab map by Al-Idrisi from mediaeval Spain	121
4. Greater Russia as the Golden Horde, Lesser Russia as the Blue Horde, and Byelorussia as the White Horde	124
5. The beginning of the Tartar and Mongol invasion as described by contemporaries	125
6. Amazons in the XVII century Russia. Russian women wearing yashmaks	129

Chapter 5 Our reconstruction of the Russian history before the battle of Kulikovo

1. The origins of the Russian history	133
2. The invasion of the Tartars and the Mongols as the unification of Russia under the rule of the Novgorod = Yaroslavl dynasty of Georgiy = Genghis-Khan and then his brother Yaroslav = Batu-Khan = Ivan Kalita	134
2.1. Genghis-Khan = Georgiy = Ryurik	135
2.1.1. His original in the XIV century is Yuri = Georgiy Danilovich of Moscow	135
2.1.2. The identity of Ryurik, the founder of the royal dynasty of the Russian princes, the dating of his lifetime and the localization of his endeavours	135
2.1.3. The fastest and most comfortable way from Greece to Rome, and the location of the famous “Graeco-Varangian Route”	140
2.1.4. The three brothers: Ryurik, Sineus and Truvor. The division of the Russo-Mongolian Horde into the Golden Horde, the White Horde and the Blue Horde in the XIV century	141
2.1.5. The hypothesis about the origins of the Muslim era of Hegira	141
2.2. Batu-Khan identified as Yaroslav, his XIV century original being Ivan Danilovich Kalita = Caliph	141
2.2.1. A brief biography	141
2.2.2. An attempt of transferring the capital to Kiev	142
2.2.3. The battle between Batu-Khan and the Hungarian king with his allies	142
2.2.4. The Battle of Kalka fought between the “Mongols”, or the Russians, and the “Russians”, or the Poles	143
2.3. The “Mongol and Tartar invasion” according to the Russian chronicles: Russians fighting Russians	144
3. The Tartar and Mongol yoke in Russia as the period of military rule in the united Russian Empire	145
3.1. The difference between our version and the Millerian-Romanovian	145
3.2. Alexander Nevskiy = Berke-Khan. His original: Simeon the Proud or Chanibek-Khan (the XIV century)	146
3.3. The Sarays as the headquarters of the Great Princes, or Khans	146
3.4. Imperial communications	147
3.5. The Mongols as participants of the XIV century crusades	148

Chapter 6 The Battle of Kulikovo

1. The strife of the late XIV century in the Horde. Dmitriy Donskoi as Tokhtamysh-Khan. The Battle of Kulikovo and the “Conquest of Moscow”. A general overview	150
2. The Battle of Kulikovo	151
2.1 The actual location of the Kulikovo field	151

2.2. Kulishki in Moscow and the Church of All Saints built in honour of the warriors slain in the Battle of Kulikovo on the Slayvanskaya Square in Moscow	152
2.3. The information about the Battle of Kulikovo: origins and present condition	154
2.4. Mamai's headquarters on the Krasniy Kholm (Red Hill) near the Kulikovo Field vs. the Krasniy Kholm, Krasnokholmskiy Bridge and Krasnokholmskaya Embankment in Moscow	154
2.5. Kuzmina Gat in the Battle of Kulikovo and the neighbourhood of Kuzminki in Moscow	155
2.6. The identification of Kolomna as the starting point of Dmitriy's march towards the Kulikovo Field	156
2.7. The Kotly from the Kulikovo Battle and the Kotly in Moscow	157
2.8. The inspection before the battle at the Devichye Field, near the Devichiy Monastery, and the Novodevichiy Monastery on the Devichye Field in Russia	157
2.9. The Devichiy Monastery, the Babiy Gorodok and the Polyanka on the right bank of the Moskva and the possibility of identifying them as the Devichye Field and the place where Dmitriy Donskoi had inspected his troops	158
2.10. The crossing of the Moskva	160
2.11. The Berezouy and the Berseneyevskaya Embankment in Moscow	160
2.12. The River Don and its relation to the Battle of Kulikovo. The Podonskoye Yard in Moscow	160
2.13. River Mecha on the Kulikovo Field as the Moskva River (or, alternatively, one of its tributaries called Mocha)	161
2.14. River Nepryadva on the Kulikovo Field and the Naprudnaya River on the Kulishki field in Moscow. River Neglinka in Moscow	161
2.15. The ambush of Vladimir Andreyevich on the Kulikovo Field and the Vladimirskaia Church in Moscow	162
2.16. "River Chura at Mikhailov" next to the Kulikovo Field vs River Chura and the eight Mikhailovskiy Lanes in Moscow	163
2.17. River Sosna and the Brasheva (Borovitskaya) Road to the Kulikovo Field identified as the Sosenka River and the Old Borovskaya Road leading towards the centre of Moscow	165
2.18. Yaroslav and Alexander in the description of the Kulikovo Battle	168
2.19. Who had fought whom upon the Kulikovo field?	168
2.20. A brief digression and a comparison of the Russian and Tartar architecture	169
3. The communal grave of the heroes slain in the Battle of Kulikovo in the Old Simonov Monastery, Moscow	169
3.1. Where are the graves of the warriors who had fallen in the battle of Kulikovo?	169
3.2. The old Simonov Monastery presently. The discovery of an ancient communal grave in 1994	171
3.3. The location of the Rozhestveno village that Dmitriy Donskoi had granted to the Old Simonov monastery after the Battle of Kulikovo	177
3.4. The battle between Mamai and Tokhtamysh in 1380 as yet another reflection of the Kulikovo Battle of 1380	177
4. The Battle of Kulikovo and our geographical reconstruction thereof	177
5. Apparently, Moscow was founded around 1382. The "Battle of Moscow" allegedly fought between the Russians and the Tartars in 1382 as yet another reflection of the Kulikovo Battle	178

6. Tokhta-Khan and the military leader Nogai as duplicates of Tokhtamysh-Khan and the warlord Mamai	179
7. The capital of Dmitriy Donskoi = Tokhtamysh-Khan and its location before the Battle of Kulikovo	179
8. On the history of the Church of Our Lady's Nativity, which is part of the Old Simonov monastery	180
9. Mamai the temnik is also known to us as Ivan Velyaminov the tysyatskiy. Both titles correspond to the rank of army commander, and translate as "leader of thousands"	182
10. The Battle of Kulikovo recorded in the famous book of Marco Polo	185
11. Other places in Moscow related to the Battle of Kulikovo in one way or another	188
11.1. Seven churches on the Kulikovo Field, or the Kulishki in Moscow	188
11.2. Mass burials at Kulishki in the centre of Moscow	191
11.3. The Andronikov Monastery and the Battle of Kulikovo	192
11.4. The modern Dmitriy Donskoi memorial at the foot of the Red (Krasniy) or Taganskiy Hill in Moscow	197
12. The Battle of Kulikovo on an XVII century icon	197
13. A brief history of coinage in Moscow	204
14. The history of the Donskoi Monastery in Moscow and the parallels with the Battle of Kulikovo on the territory of modern Moscow (By T. N. Fomenko)	205
14.1. The battle against the "Tartar" Kazy-Girey in the XVI century, the Donskoi Monastery and the icon of Our Lady of Don	205
14.2. The true datings of the presumably ancient plans of Moscow that are said to date from the XVI-XVII century nowadays	216
14.3. Additional remarks in re the Battle of Kulikovo	222
14.4. The origins of the name Mikhailovo at River Chura in Moscow	222
14.5. The Grebnyovskaya Icon given to Dmitriy Donskoi, and River Chura in Moscow	224

Chapter 7 From the Battle of Kulikovo to Ivan the Terrible

1. The capture of Moscow by Dmitriy = Tokhtamysh in 1382 and the naissance of Moscovia as a state	226
2. The identity of Lithuania and the location of Siberia	226
3. The parallel between Russian and Lithuanian history	228
4. Russia (aka The Horde) in the first half of the XV century. Epoch of strife and embroilment	230
5. Ivan III	231
5.1. Russian principalities united under the rule of Moscow during the reign of Ivan III. The end of the strife	231
5.2. The Turks and the Russians seizing Constantinople in 1453. Moscow and its alias of "The Third Rome"	232
5.3. The marriage between Ivan III and Sophia Palaiologos and a change of customs at the court of Moscow	232
6. Vassily III as the Sovereign of All Russia	233
7. The seals of the Great Princes (or Khans) in the XV-XVII century	233

Chapter 8 The epoch of Ivan the Terrible. The origins of Russian history, its authors and their methods

1. The Great Strife as a collision between two dynasties. The end of the Horde and the beginning of the Romanovian reign	237
--	-----

2. Surviving original documents dating from the epoch of Ivan the Terrible	237
3. Oddities in the traditional version of the biography of Ivan the Terrible	239
4. The Great Strife of the XVI-XVII century as the epoch of the struggle between the Old Russian (Mongolian) Horde dynasty and the new Western dynasty of the Romanovs. The end of the Russo-Mongolian Horde in the XVII century	239
5. The “reign of Ivan the Terrible” in our reconstruction	240
5.1. Ivan IV Vassilyevich as the first Czar of “Ivan’s epoch”, regnant in 1547-1553	240
5.2. The infant Dmitriy Ivanovich as the second Czar from the period of “Ivan the Terrible” regnant in 1553-1563. The de facto reign of the elected council	242
5.3. The “third period of Ivan the Terrible” as the reign of the infant Ivan Ivanovich in 1563-1572. The Zakharyins (Romanovs) and their ascension to power. The repressions and the Oprichnina	243
5.4. Simeon Beckboulatovich regnant in 1572-1584 as the “fourth period of Ivan the Terrible”	246
5.5. The famous synodical of “Ivan the Terrible” as repentance for the young Czar Ivan Ivanovich	248
6. The creation of the Litseyov Svod and its dating	248
7. In re the numerous wives of Ivan the Terrible	249

Chapter 9 The Great Strife in Russian history of the XVII century

1. The period between the death of “Ivan the Terrible”, also known as Simeon, and the Great Strife	250
2. Czar Boris Fyodorovich “Godunov”	250
2.1. Czar Boris Fyodorovich is most likely to have been the son of Czar Fyodor Ivanovich	250
2.2. Our hypothesis about Boris “Godunov” being the son of Czar Fyodor is confirmed by the old documents	251
2.3. The reasons why the Romanovs had distorted the history of Boris Godunov	252
2.4. The legal heir of Czar Fyodor Ivanovich	253
2.5. Could Czar Boris “Godunov” have been a son of Fyodor Ivanovich, a minor landlord?	253
2.6. The role of Boris “Godunov” during the reign of Czar Ivan and Czar Fyodor	254
2.7. The famous legend about the “lengthy pleas for Boris to ascend the throne” as a political myth that dates from the epoch of the Romanovs	255
2.8. The age of Czar Boris at the time of his demise	256
3. The Great Strife. Czar Dmitriy Ivanovich, also known as Lzhedmitriy – the false Dmitriy	256
3.1. The unsolved enigma of the Russian history	256
3.2. The boyar plot against Czar Boris	257
3.3. The “false Dmitriy” as the real Prince Dmitriy, son of Czar Ivan	258
3.4. The Romanovs as the authors of the version that claimed Dmitriy to have been an impostor	258
3.5. The plot of the boyars and the murder of Czar Dmitriy, known as “Lzhedmitriy the First”	259
3.6. The reasons for the cremation of the “false Dmitriy’s” body	259
3.7. “Lzhedmitriy II” as Czar Dmitriy, also known as “Lzhedmitriy I”	260

4. The war against Stepan Timofeyevich Razin and the victory of the Romanovs	261
5. The destruction of the old imperial books of ranks by the Romanovs and the creation of false genealogical documents to replace them	266
Chapter 10 Russia and Turkey as two parts of a formerly united empire
1. Introduction	269
2. Crescent with a cross or a star on the old coats of arms of the Russian cities	270
3. The Russo-Turkish title of the Muscovite Czar written inside a triple circle	278
4. The Ouspenskiy monastery in the Crimea. Do we interpret the history of the Crimean Khans correctly?	279
5. How the Turks had called their scimitars	282
Chapter 11 The identity of Tamerlane (Timur), the famous conqueror
1. Introduction	283
2. The physical appearance of Timur reconstructed by Gerasimov from the skull found in his grave. Could Timur have been European?	283
3. Arabian names in Russian history	286
4. Temir (Tamerlane) and Mehmet (Mohammed) II	286
5. Temir = Tamerlane = Mohammed II as the prototype of Alexander the Great	287
6. The history of Alexander's campaigns: the time and the purpose of its creation	287
7. Tamerlane and Alexis Comnenus	289
8. The meaning of the name Timur	289
9. The wars between Timur and Tokhtamysh	290
10. The cities of Samara and Samarqand	290
11. The Nogai Horde	291
12. The Goths and the Semirechye region	291
13. Events of the epoch of Mehmet II (the XV century) reflected in the biography of Tamerlane (the XIV century)	292
13.1. Mehmet = Mohammed II	292
13.2. The city of Samarqand, the capital of Timur, as described in the chronicles that relate the XV century events, and its true identity	292
13.3. Sultan Mehmet-Khan identified as Sultan Mehmet II. Who could have taken Bayazid captive?	293
14. The organisation of Timur's army. Had his Horde really been "wild"?	293
15. The issue of Tamerlane's religion	294
16. The burial of Timur	296
17. The customs of Timur's court	297
18. Tamerlane and Ivan III	297
19. Conclusion	298
Chapter 12 The war of 1773-1775 fought between the Romanovs and Pougachev as the last war fought against the Horde. The division of the remaining territories between the Romanovs and the nascent United States of America
1. Map of the world as envisioned by the authors of the Encyclopaedia Britannica in the late XVIII century	299
1.1. The map of Europe as drawn in a copy of the Encyclopaedia Britannica dating from 1771	299

1.2. The map of Asia as drawn in a copy of the Encyclopaedia Britannica dating from 1771	302
1.3. The map of Africa as drawn in a copy of the Encyclopaedia Britannica dating from 1771	302
1.4. The map of North America as drawn in a copy of the Encyclopaedia Britannica dating from 1771	304
1.5. The Muscovite Tartary of the XVIII century with its capital in Tobolsk	305
2. The war against Pougachev as the last war against the Horde. Muscovite Tartary divided between the Romanovs and the United States, the former claiming Siberia and the latter, half of the North American continent. The naissance of the USA in 1776	307
2.1. The great divide and its concealment from history	307
2.1.1. Muscovite Tartary	307
2.1.2. The war between the Romanovs and “Pougachev” as the war against the enormous Muscovite Tartary	308
2.2. North America on the maps of the XVII-XVIII century. The Europeans had remained ignorant of the geography of the American West and Southwest until the defeat of “Pougachev”. The gigantic terra incognita and the “insular” nature of the Californian peninsula	310
2.3. North America on the maps presumably dating from the XV-XVI century. The latter contain more correct information about America than the maps that are supposed to postdate them	313
2.4. The war against Pougachev in the Romanovian rendition. The futile attempts of A. S. Pushkin to get access to the archives that contained historical materials pertaining to the “War against Pougachev”	316
2.5. Rapid expansion of the territory governed by the Romanovs after their victory over “Pougachev”	321
2.6. Novaya Zemlya depicted correctly on earlier maps (as an island) and incorrectly on some of the later ones (as a peninsula)	323
2.7. The formation of the United States in 1776 and the annexation of the American territories of the Muscovite Tartary	328
2.8. The information contained in the old maps of America	328
3. The voyage taken by A. S. Pushkin to the Ural region in 1833 with the objective of collecting more information for Pougachev’s biography. The reason why Pougachev’s soldiers had referred to their headquarters as to “Moscow”	338
4. Numerous towns in the Ural, allegedly founded in the Bronze Age (Arkaim being the most famous) as the likely relics of Muscovite Tartary, or the state that had existed in Siberia and America in the XV-XVIII century A.D.	345
5. The conquest of Siberia after the victory over “Pougachev” and the trace that it has left in the numismatic history of Russia	348

Chapter 13 Old Russia as a bilingual state with Russian and Turkic as two official languages. Letters considered Arabic nowadays were used for transcribing Russian words

1. Arabic inscriptions upon Russian weapons	354
1.1. Why would Nikita Davydov, a Russian craftsman, decorate the royal helmet with Arabic inscriptions?	354
1.2. The reason why Alexander Nevskiy and Ivan the Terrible wore helmets with Arabic writing. The famous “Arabic conquest of the world” as it happened in reality	360

2. Arabic text upon the Russian mitre of Princes Mstislavskiy	366
3. The word “Allah” as used by the Russian Church in the XVI and even the XVII century, alongside the quotations from the Koran	367
3.1. “The Voyage beyond the Three Seas” by Afanasiy Nikitin	367
3.2. Authentic Old Russian attire dating from the XVII century and decorated with lettering in three scripts – Cyrillic, Arabic and a “mystery script” that defies interpretation today	370
4. Occasional use of Arabic script in Russian texts in the relatively recent epoch of the XVII century. Travel diaries of Paul of Aleppo	374
5. Arabic numerals as derived from the alphanumeric symbols of the Slavs and the Greeks in the XV-XVI century A.D.	375
5.1. The invention of positional notation: when did it happen?	375
5.2. The origins of the Arabic numerals used for positional notation	377
5.3. Conspicuous traces of sixes fashioned into fives found in the old documents	382
5.4. XVII century alterations introduced into the old datings	383
6. Russian alphabet before the XVII century. The poorly legible inscription on the church-bell of Zvenigorod declared a “cryptogram”	390
7. European writing before the XVII century. The so-called “European cryptograms”	400

Chapter 14 Various data

1. More in re the identification of Yaroslavl as the historical Novgorod the Great	403
1.1. River Volga and River Volkhov	403
1.2. Excerpts from the history of Yaroslavl	404
1.3. The possible location of the famous library formerly owned by “Ivan the Terrible”	407
2. The identity of the Kagans	408
3. The Horde as the Cossack council (Rada)	410
4. Kiev as the capital of the Goths	410
5. The destruction of inscriptions on the Old Russian relics	411
5.1. The tomb of Yaroslav the Wise in the Cathedral of St. Sophia in Kiev	411
5.2. The monasteries of Staro-Simonov and Bogoyavlenskiy in Moscow	412
5.3. Why would the Romanovs need to chisel off the frescoes and put layers of bricks over the old Czars’ tombs in the cathedrals of the Kremlin?	413
6. The fake sarcophagi of the pre-Romanovian Czarinas made by the Romanovs in the XVII century	418
7. In the second part of the XVII century the Romanovs removed old headstones from the Russian cemeteries and either destroyed them or used them as construction material. The excavations of 1999-2000 conducted in the Louzhetskiy monastery of Mozhaysk	425
8. Geography according to a map of Great Tartary that dates from 1670	435
9. A. I. Soulakadzev and his famous collection of books and chronicles	436
10. The name of the victor in the battle of 1241 between the Tartars and the Czechs	441
11. The location of Mongolia as visited by the famous traveller Plano Carpini	442
11.1. The “correct” book of Carpini as we have at our disposal today versus the “incorrect” book, which has vanished mysteriously	442
11.2. The return route of Carpini	442
11.3. The geography of Mongolia according to Carpini	443
11.4. In re the name of the Tartars	444
11.5. Mongolian climate	444

11.6. The Imperial Mongolian graveyard	444
11.7. The second graveyard of the Mongols	444
11.8. Cannons in the army of Presbyter Johannes	445
11.9. The language of the Mongols	445
11.10. The real nature of the Mongolian tents, presumed to have made of red and white felt	446
11.11. The throne of the Mongolian Emperor	447
11.12. The priests from the entourage of the Mongolian Emperor	448
11.13. The Mongolian worship of Genghis-Khans effigy	449
12. Notes of a mediaeval Turkish janissary written in the Cyrillic script	449
13. The crypt of the Godunovs in the Troitse-Sergiev Monastery. The Ipatyevskiy monastery in Kostroma	451
14. The modern location of Astrakhan differs from that of the old Tartar Astrakhan, which the Romanovs appear to have razed out of existence	454
15. The reasons why the Romanovian administration would have to destroy hundreds of maps compiled by the Russian cartographer Ivan Kirillov	455
16. Braids worn by all inhabitants of Novgorod regardless of sex	457
17. The testament of Peter the Great	457
18. The foundation of most modern European capitals: a chronology	459
18.1. Our reconstruction: most of the modern Eurasian capitals were founded after the Great = “Mongolian” conquest of the XIV century	459
18.2. A most noteworthy mediaeval table of distances between Moscow and various capitals	460
18.3. The European capital circle and its centre	464
19. How the figure of St. George ended up on the coat of arms of Russia	465
20. The real meaning of the inscriptions on the old “Mongolian” coat of arms of Russia. How the Romanovs had attempted to conceal this	468
20.1. What we know about the history of the Russian national coat of arms	468
20.2. The national coat of arms of the Russian Empire, or the Horde, in the XVI century	469
20.3. The Great Perm as mentioned in the Russian Chronicles and drawn on the Russian coat of arms dating from the XVI century. The real location of Perm	472
20.4. The land of Vyatka as described in the Russian chronicles and represented on the XVI century coat of arms of the Horde. The real location of Vyatka	476
20.5. Tver as reflected in the Russian chronicles and represented in the Russian coat of arms in the XVI century	478
20.6. Pskov = Pleskov = Prussia on the coat of arms of Russia, or the Horde, in the XVI century	478
20.7. The disposition of the twelve kingdoms (tribes) as seen on the XVI century Russian coat of arms in the geographical maps of Europe	478
20.8. The Romanovian coat of arms from Korb’s diary	479
20.9. The British Isles = England or the Isle of Crete as the Cantian island on the coat of arms of Russia, or the Horde	480
20.10. Obdora in the Russian coat of arms and the “ancient” Abdera in Betica, Spain	482
20.11. The mysterious Oudoran principality on the Russian coat of arms and River Odra in Germany	482
20.12. Our reconstruction	483

21. The old coat of arms of Yaroslavl depicting a bear holding a Cossack pole topped by an Ottoman crescent. These poles were considered a symbol of power all across Europe up until the XVII century	485
22. The “ancient Olympus” and Russia as the Horde in the XIV-XVI century	486
22.1. Kronos and other Olympian deities of the Western Europe	486
22.2. The name Irina reflected in the historical toponymy of the Great = “Mongolian” Empire	490
23. World history according to some German authors of the XVII-XVIII century. The book of Johannes Heinrich Driemel	491
24. The imperial bicephalous eagle and the possible origins of the symbol	494
25. The genealogy of the Great Princes of Moscow as re-written in the XVII century	496
26. The baptism of Russia	496
27. How the Romanovian falsification of documents was reflected in the history of Russian handwriting	500
28. An example of an obviously counterfeited Russian historical document – a royal decree of Ivan the Terrible	506
29. Despite all their attempts, historians never managed to conceal the fact that the Muscovite Czars had worn the title of a Great Emperor	507
30. The reaction of the Russian nobility to the introduction of the Scaligerian version of the “ancient” history in the XVIII century	509
31. Vehement opposition encountered by the proponents of Romanovian and Millerian history in the XVIII century. Lomonosov and Miller	510
32. Lomonosov’s “History of Russia”: authenticity issue. Lomonosov or Miller? (By A. T. Fomenko, N. S. Kellin and G. V. Nosovski)	514
33. Foreign eyewitnesses of the XVI century located Novgorod the Great on River Volga	518
34. The Alexandrovskaya Sloboda as the capital of Russia, or the Horde, in the XVI century	519
35. The counterfeited inscription with the name of the monarch on the alleged portrait of Ivan the Terrible dating from the XVII century	520
36. Lettering on the neckpiece of a XVI century chasuble with a counterfeited name of a Russian Czar	523
37. Amazing Russian Biblical scenes on the XVI century frescoes, which have miraculously survived in the Pokrovskaya Church of the Alexandrovskaya Sloboda	526
38. The reason why the megalithic palaces and temples are more common for the southern countries than for those with a moderate climate	529
39. A cross with Slavic lettering received as a present from the Patriarch of Jerusalem by Charlemagne	530
40. Mediaeval French kings gave their oaths on a holy book in Church Slavonic	532
41. The famous Attila the Hun as a contemporary of the renowned Russian Prince Vladimir, according to the evidence of mediaeval German books. This is a virtual impossibility in Scaligerian chronology	532
42. The tugra as a sign of authenticity used in the royal documents of the Middle Ages	533
43. The “ancient” Achilles as the leader of the Myrmidons – or, according to the chronicler John Malalas, the leader of the Huns and the Bulgarians	543

44. The Russian terem and the Oriental harem as two different names of the same thing	543
45. Peculiar names in the old maps of Russia that contradict the Scaligerian version of history	549
46. The Russian subbotniki sect had been of the opinion that the Biblical Assyria, Egypt and Babylon identified as the mediaeval Russia	550
47. The old cathedrals of the Western Europe have preserved the style of the XV-XVI century Russian churches	551
48. The organs of the Western European cathedrals have preserved the ancient musical culture of the XV-XVI century Russia, or the Horde	561

Part II: NEW CHRONOLOGY AND CONCEPTION OF BRITISH HISTORY. ENGLAND AND RUSSIA (OR THE HORDE)

Introduction	567
--------------------	-----

Chapter 15 A brief scheme of the English history in its Scaligerian version

1. The oldest English chronicles	568
1.1. The Anglo-Saxon chronicle	568
1.2. "History of the Brits" by Nennius	572
1.3. "Historia Britonum" by Galfridus Monmutensis	572
1.4. Several other "ancient" English chronicles	574
1.5. The names of the cities, ethnic groups and countries known to us today as reflected in mediaeval English chronicles	574
2. The Scaligerian chronology of British history	576
2.1. Scotland and England: two parallel dynastic currents	576
2.2. English history of the alleged years 1-445 A.D. England as a Roman colony	577
2.3. The epoch between the alleged years 445 and 830 A.D. Six kingdoms and their unification	577
2.4. The epoch of the alleged years 830-1040 A.D. ends with the Danish conquest and the decline of the Danish Empire	577
2.5. The epoch of the alleged years 1040-1066 A.D. The rule of the old Anglo-Saxon dynasty and its end	578
2.6. The epoch between the alleged years 1066 and 1327 A.D. The Norman dynasty followed by the dynasty of Anjou. The two Edwards	578
2.7. The epoch between 1327 and 1602	579

Chapter 16 Parallels between the history of England and Byzantium, Rome and the Horde

1. A rough comparison of the dynastic currents of England and Rome (Byzantium)	580
2. The dynastic parallelism between the history of England and Byzantium. A general superimposition scheme of the two	582
3. The dynastic parallelism table	583
3.1. The English history of the alleged years 640-830 A.D. and the Byzantine history of the alleged years 378-553 A.D. as reflections of the same late mediaeval original. A shift of 275 years	583
3.2. English history of the alleged years 830-1040 A.D. and the Byzantine history of the alleged years 553-830 A.D. as two reflections of the same late mediaeval original. A shift of 275 years	584

3.3. English history of 1040-1327 A.D. and Byzantine history of 1143-1453 A.D. A shift of 120 years	586
3.4. The end of the parallelism. The conquest of Constantinople by the Ottomans in 1453. The fall of Byzantium	594

Chapter 17 The abbreviation and saturation of English history

1. Our conception of the English history	598
2. How Byzantine and “Mongolian” chronicles became part of the English history	599

Chapter 18 Despite the attempts of the XVII-XVIII century hoaxers, English chronicles retain a great deal of information concerning the real events of the XI-XVI century. England and Russia, or the Horde

1. The “ancient” Roman consul Brutus as the first Roman conqueror of Britain and simultaneously the first “ancient” Trojan king of the Brits	601
2. The “ancient” Brutus the Trojan from the English chronicles, the patriarch of the Brits, turns out to be a contemporary of Julius Caesar and Genghis-Khan, Conqueror of the World	602
3. Biblical events on the pages of the English chronicles	604
4. The location of the “ancient” Troy	604
5. The reason why Russia and Britain are both presumed to be insular states according to the English chronicles	605
6. The location of Britain conquered by Brutus. The itinerary of his fleet	606
7. Brutus has to fight against Gog and Magog during the conquest of Britain (aka the Tartars and Mongols or the Ten Tribes of Israel)	607
8. Julius Caesar found himself close to the Russian lands during the conquest of Britain, or Albania	611
9. The location of London in the X-XII century. The foundation of London in the British Isles as registered chronologically	612
10. The old coat of arms of London and the English Kingdom of East Saxons depicts the Ottoman scimitars (or crescents)	615
11. The identity of the Scots and Scotland in the XIII-XIV century. The names of Russia and Scotland appear in the mediaeval English maps around the XV-XVI century	617
12. The five primordial languages of the ancient Britain. The nations that spoke them and the territories they inhabited in the XI-XIV century	625
13. The location of the six initial British kingdoms: East Anglia, Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex and Mercia	627
14. The famous King Arthur as a legendary reflection of the Horde that had invaded the British Isles in the XIV-XVI century	628
15. William I the Conqueror and the Battle of Hastings dated to the alleged year 1066. The Fourth Crusade of 1204	629
15.1. A mutual superimposition of two famous wars in England and in Byzantium	629
15.2. The English version of William’s biography	629
15.3. The Conquest of Constantinople: Byzantine version	631
15.4. The parallelism between the events related in the English and the Byzantine chronicles	631

16. Mediaeval Russia, or the Horde, as reflected in later English chronicles. The identity of the Galatians, who had received an epistle of Paul the Apostle, and the dating of this event	634
17. The dating of the maps compiled by Matthew of Paris. The epoch when Scythia, or the Horde, became known as “the mother of dragons, the cradle of scorpions, the nest of snakes and the hotbed of demons”, and the reasons behind this reputation	636
Comments	640

Part III: THE CHRONOLOGY AND GENERAL CONCEPTION OF ROMAN AND BYZANTINE HISTORY

Chapter 19	The problem of reconstructing the veracious version of Roman history
1. The chronological structure of the modern “history textbook”		644
2. The problem of chronological result interpretation in the reconstruction of the true ancient history		645
3. The principle of the veracity of the “general concepts” as related in the ancient documents		645
3.1. Traces of the true history and the original chronological tradition		645
3.2. The mediaeval concept of three kingdoms put in a sequence		646
4. The geographic localisation principle as applied to the ancient historical events and based on the maps of the XVII-XVIII century		647
5. The principle of estimating the age of a given text by the time of its first mass publication		648
5.1. The epoch when a text was published in a large number of copies must be close to the epoch of said text’s creation		648
5.2. Comparing the respective ages of the New Testament and the Old		648
Chapter 20	The Great War, the Great Empire and the great crusades
1. World wars before the XVII century		650
1.1. The “Great Exodus” reflected ten or thirteen times in the Scaliger-Petavius history textbook		650
1.2. The first and oldest possible original of the great wars, or exodus		651
1.3. The second possible original of the great wars, or exodus		651
1.4. The third possible original of the great wars, or exodus		651
1.5. The fourth possible original of the great wars, or exodus		652
2. What we know about the XI century, or the epoch of Christ, today		652
2.1. Christ and the “Judean War” of Joseph Flavius		652
2.2. The first crusade. Alexandria in the XI century as the Old Rome in Egypt. Jerusalem = Troy = Ilion as Czar-Grad, or the New Rome		653
2.3. The transfer of the old imperial capital from Alexandria, or the Old Rome, to Czar-Grad = Jerusalem = Troy = in the XI century		654
2.4. The biography of Pope Hildebrand. The date when the Holy See was moved to Rome in Italy		655
2.5. Had the Italian city of Rome been a capital in the antiquity?		655
2.6. The Babylonian Kingdom replaced by the Greek		655

2.7. The beginning of the Christian era in the XII century as the dawn of the Greek Kingdom	656
3. A new point of view on a number of well-known concepts as suggested by our reconstruction	656
4. Jerusalem, Troy and Constantinople	658
5. Egyptian hieroglyphs and the Hebraic language	659
5.1. Geographical names were subject to flexibility before the invention of the printing press	659
5.2. Egyptian hieroglyphs of the XI-XVI century as the “Hebraic” language of the ecclesiastical tradition	660
5.3. The Hebraic, or Egyptian hieroglyphic script replaced by the Greek alphabet in the epoch of the XIII-XV century. The bilingual texts of Egypt	661
5.4. The reason why a great many inscriptions in Egyptian hieroglyphs remain beyond the attention scope of researchers and publishers	662
5.5. The forgotten meaning of the Church Slavonic word for “Jew” (“Yevrey”)	664
6. The Egyptian Alexandria as the old imperial capital	664
6.1. History of the XI-XII century: an approximated reconstruction	664
6.2. Alexandria as the centre of Greek science	665
6.3. Alexandria as the obvious capital	665
6.4. Several authors of the XVII century had believed the Egyptian pyramids to have been the sepulchres of Ptolemy = Israel and Alexander the Great	665
7. The wars fought for and around Constantinople (Jerusalem)	665
8. The division of empires. Israel and the Nicaean Empire, Judea and the Latin Empire	667

Chapter 21 Ecclesiastical history

1. History of religions	670
2. Christ from Antiochia	670
3. Reports of the XI century events as encountered in the Russian chronicles	672
4. Oriental versions of Christianity	672
5. The creation of the Biblical canon and its chronology	673
5.1. The esoteric history of the Biblical canons	673
5.2. Evangelical events reflected in the Old Testament	675
5.2.1. The Nicaean Council in the Old Testament	675
5.2.2. Christ and Elisha	676

The complete bibliography to the seven volumes	677
---	-----